

GRACE REN

I graduated from Johns Hopkins University in May 2020 with a BA in Public Health Studies and a minor in Visual Arts. For a long time, I've struggled with reconciling these two fields I dedicated my education to and have often felt like there can only be one or the other. Recently though, I'm realizing that the ability to visually communicate a story or a feeling is important for many places other than a museum. Public health is all about the transfer and applicability of knowledge to society, and throughout my career as an artist, I've noticed that art has always served as a common, humanizing tool. Simply put, it is the path to human empathy and radical social change.

Depending on when you ask, I live and work in Baltimore, Maryland and Seattle, Washington. Feel free to contact me about commissions, collaborations, or anything else.
